Ardmore, Tuesday, August 11, 1914.

EXAMPLES OF THRIFT.

Ardmore has a school boy eight years old who has worked out and saved $20 since school closed. This boy will file a statement of his earnings with his teacher on the first morning of school in September, and by that time he will have earned as much as $30 if he can keep up the same earning ratio with the past weeks.

A traveling man who makes this town frequently has a plan of saving which he says nets him $25 a month on an average. He carries a purse with him for his savings and every time that he gets in change during the month goes into this purse, and each week, when he gets home, the savings for the week are deposited in a savings bank. This money was formerly spent in some manner—anyway, it disappeared, before he began, the plan of making a systematic saving each day.

One citizen of this town has $500 which he has saved by putting the dimes which he gets into a separate fund and saving them. He has kept up the saving habit for several months. The fund grows each week, and he gets more pleasure out of seeing his savings grow than he could out of the spending of the dimes. A systematic saving like this will put the salaried man in business; it will put the tenant in possession of a home, and it will lessen the bad accounts among the merchants. The frugal man pays his bills. He may be called stingy by the thoughtless spender, but it is never said of him that he is dishonest.

PANACEA FOR ENVY.

Under the head of "A Sabbath Thought" in Sunday's Ardmoreite, we published a portion of a speech made by W. B. Harrison, secretary of the Oklahoma Bankers' association, made recently before the bankers of South Dakota. Mr. Harrison gives out a thought which, if grasped, will prove to be a panacea for both envy and greed. Humanity is inclined to envy those who pass us in the accumulation of wealth and there can be no envy or greed when it is understood that there is plenty for all. Mr. Harrison says the idea that there is just so much wealth, and when it is held by certain men that others cannot obtain it, is wrong. He says there is enough wealth for all, possessions held by one do not deprive another of owning equally as much, and to make his assertion come with force by saying that the wealth of sunshine and the beauty of the sky cannot be used exclusively by one man. The enjoyment of these things by one man cannot prohibit all other men from getting the same pleasure out of them. He compares wealth accumulation to this figure of speech and makes it very plain that there is wealth enough for all, and points out the truth that dissipates hatred, envy and jealousy.

Daily Thought.

The most manifest sign of wisdom is continual cheerfulness; such a state and condition, like things in the regions above the moon, is always clear and serene.—Montaigne.

CASH ECHOLS

"O COURSE"

BROUGHT HIS SOFT SOAP.

John Fields, republican candidate for governor, on his speaking tour through the southern portion of the state, is making an attempt to soft-soap the people.

He says he favors the grandfather clause. Can anyone tell us of a republican state that has such a law? He says he favors separate schools. Does he hope to have southern people forget that the republican party has always stood for mixed schools?

He says he is glad to see the Confederate soldiers cared for by the state. Can he tell us of a republican state that cares for our old fathers, who bear the scars of battle? He says he favors the separate coach law. Does he hope to have us forget that only after the democrats had control of the state there was such a law given us?

John Fields has always worked with and voted with a party that stands for just the opposite of what he says he stands for. How on earth can he ever establish himself as being consistent. If he stands for these things why did he not join with the democrats and help produce the results he would have us believe he likes so well? Just let your mind go back over the public men you have known and see if you can call to mind any other man in any other campaign who presents as big a bundle of inconsistencies as John Fields hands out to the public. Do you suppose he expects the people to really be soft-soaped in any such manner?

Now, let's spend a moment analyzing the chances of John Fields to be elected in November. There are more democrats in Oklahoma than there are republicans. That of itself eliminates Fields from being a formidable candidate. The republicans are divided. John Hickam is running on the progressive republican ticket and the republican vote will be divided this fall between Fields and Hickam. That eliminates either one of them from being a factor in the campaign. There is still another important feature that enters into this campaign that will have its effect upon the result of the election in favor of the democrats this fall. The republicans know they cannot elect a ticket. They are good citizens who do not desire to be disfranchised, they pay taxes and they want to have a voice in the affairs of the state; they could have a voice only by voting the democratic ticket. Thousands of them registered as democrats and voted as democrats in the primary and will vote the democratic ticket this fall. Many others who registered as republicans voted the democratic ticket this fall. These men are good citizens, their word is good in business affairs, and their word is good in politics. They are men who will not break a pledge like this if they desired to do so, and they have nothing to gain and they lose their own honor by violating their primary election pledge. The republicans who voted with the democrats do not belong to the politician element of the party. They are business men who keep their word.

If there were an equal number of republicans and democrats in Oklahoma, the democrats would win, because the republican vote is divided. If the voting strength of the two parties were equal and the republican party had but one ticket in the field, the democrats would win, because states are inclined to vote with the party in national power. We do not want an administration out of harmony with Woodrow Wilson and the democratic congress. If the two parties had the same number of voters in the state and there was no division in the republican party, and if there was no influence from the national inclination to vote with the national administration, the democrats would win because too many republicans have registered as democrats, have pledged their honor to vote the democratic ticket, and will not violate that obligation.

There is no chance for republican success at the polls this fall.

DEMOCRATS NOTICE.

All democratic voters of Precinct 7, Morgan township, are hereby notified that a meeting of the precinct voters will be held at the Confederate home Saturday afternoon at four o'clock, August 15, 1914, for the purpose of electing a precinct committeeman to represent the precinct on the democratic County Central Committee for the ensuing two years.

W. T. SIMMONS,
Precinct Committeeman.

Afflicted Britishers.

Few people are aware that there are 34,000 persons stone blind in the United Kingdom, 150,000 whose vision is so defective that they cannot read, and no fewer than 1,000,000 sightless human beings in the British Empire outside these islands.—London Mail.

MY STAR WAS AN OUTLAW
—REFORMED—OF COURSE

By CARROLL FLEMING
(Thanhouse Stage Director, who produced Al Jennings in "Beating Back.")

When I learned from Mr. Charles J. Hite, that "Beating Back" was to be the first big production which I was to direct for him, my feelings were a mingle of pleasure and apprehension. Pleasure, at the thought of handling so big and interesting a subject as the life story of a real bandit, and apprehension in contemplating the difficulties ahead of me in securing a satisfactory representation of Jennings at the hands of my actor for the screen, no matter how clever he might be.

On expressing my doubts on the subject to Mr. Hite, he promptly dispelled my fears by assuring me that Al Jennings would play himself. On his arrival at the Thanhouse studio, later a leading candidate for the gubernatorial nomination in Oklahoma, announced that he had just three weeks to devote to the work of transposing the screen his tempestuous career. His longer absence, he said, from the seat of the campaign, would seriously jeopardize his political chances.

Enter worry. With one hundred horses, scores of bandits, marshals, a real railroad train and passengers to be robbed, extras innumerable, three yoke of oxen, and all the requirements of a cattle camp, to be assembled and shipped to the mountains eighty miles away, left little time to indulge in the maxims or the Castle walk.

Then it rained, and rained. In the words of the oldest inhabitant of the Ogden Range, the weather was plumb juicy. I can still see Jennings booted and spurred, seated lumped up in a chair on the porch of the little tavern where we stayed, gazing at the sodden skies with an expression on his face which some of his victims of the old bandit days, would doubtless recall as fearfully familiar.

At such times yours truly made it a point not to venture within talking distance of the little human dynamo in the gray suit, for the obvious reason I, and I alone, was responsible for such outrageous weather conditions. Who else could be? Jennings knew this, the actors were certain of it, and the very horses, saddled and ready at the improvised racks in the muddy road, which literally ran by the little tavern, gazed at me with accusing eyes.

Then suddenly from my observation tower from an upper porch, I would note the breaking of the clouds on the far horizon, certain precursor of coming sunshine. With a sigh of relief, I would leave my post, stalk confidently up to my star, and delightedly announce that we would begin taking pictures in exactly so many minutes by the town clock.

Luck, or the fact that it was April, or some other indefinable influence, almost invariably seemed to favor my proposition, and to this fact, I attribute my being able to hold in leash the most high strung, temperamental man I have ever known. Now, strangely enough, it was these very characteristics in him that, as his director, I valued most, for he had no previous experience as an actor. Without these characteristics, my task might have been almost hopeless, so far as the central figure in the story was concerned.

In the earlier scenes the work was hard for Mr. Jennings. Here was a man who, living over the most vital period of his career, dressed, armed and accoutered, identically as he had been at the very moment of his unlawful experiences, was called upon instantly to reproduce the emotions which controlled him at such times and then to give the outward expression which would make them by way of the camera and the screen, absolutely clear to the moving picture audience.

And the marvel of it is that Jennings did this. In a somewhat wide and varied experience as a director of actors, I have never known a man possessing a technique more natural, more certain or more effective in reading definitely required results than that with which nature has equipped Al Jennings. Never self-conscious, direct in method and absolutely earnest in purpose, he played scenes seemingly without effort, that would have taxed to the limit the resources of the most experienced and talented actor.

Fortunately for me, Jennings liked my method of directing, which made for rapidity to the limit of safety. And it is gratifying to recall that our relations were of the most pleasant character.

N. B.—Except when it rained.

BOB WILLIAMS IS NOMINEE

nomination, has conceded Wilson's nomination.

Former State Auditor M. E. Trapp maintained his lead of approximately 1500 votes over Ben F. Lafayette of Checotah and apparently has won the nomination. Trapp stated Tuesday he was confident he had won.

E. B. Howard and Frank Carter are both claiming the nomination for state auditor. Howard claims his plurality will be approximately 900. Carter claims he is leading Howard by a little more than 2,000.

The positions of J. L. Lyon and J. S. Askew in the race for the nomination for secretary of state remains unchanged, Lyon still leading Askew by about 1,500.

W. H. L. Campbell apparently has been defeated by former State Senator William Franklin for the nomination for clerk of the supreme court. Franklin has a lead of about 2,000 over Campbell, with J. O. Crawford third.

Another close contest has developed in the race for the nomination for president of the board of agriculture between Lieutenant Governor J. J. McAlister and Frank M. Gault of Cary. The returns so far give Gault a lead of several hundred votes.

The task of totaling up the returns from the different counties was begun by the election board Tuesday and will continue now until the official count has been completed, which probably will take two days if no longer.

The constitutional amendment making drunkenness grounds for impeachment and removal from office, one of the five amendments proposed by Attorney General West, has been adopted, it is believed.

Path of the Kakapo.

Several birds make regular paths to and from their resorts. Those of the Antarctic penguins are noted by all explorers in their region. Very noticeable are those in the haunts of the kakapo, the large, rock-dwelling, burrow-nesting owl-like parrot of the mountains of New Zealand. They beat down regular paths along the spurs and ridges where they abound, so that a person might be excused for supposing they were meant for human feet. It is along these avenues that the birds go to and fro on their nocturnal rambles, and as they march they snap off and perhaps eat every protruding spear of grass or weed, keeping the path perfectly clean. When the path is buried in snow they still follow it on the surface and soon beat down a track.

Scarcity of Boy Laborers.

Boy labor is very scarce in New Zealand, and some manufacturers find girl labor almost equally scarce. A member of a firm of baking powder manufacturers in the Dominion advertised unsuccessfully a few months ago for boys and girls, and had to employ adult labor instead. So precious are these young people, indeed, that it is found that the only way is to take boys when they are offering, usually at the beginning of the year, and keep them through slack seasons. This particular firm gives boys straight from school $3 a week to start, and by the time they have been at the factory a year or 18 months they get $5. Boys of fourteen in the boot trade in New Zealand get $3 a week to start with.

Chinese As Engineers.

It was for years supposed that when China was once opened to railway construction many opportunities for profitable employment would occur there for European and American engineers. But these opportunities are fast dwindling away. China has followed the example of Japan, and in carrying out the works of western civilization which it is so rapidly adopting, it is as far as possible putting the work in charge of Chinese engineers, many of whom have been educated in the best schools of Europe and the United States.—Engineering News.

Armored Vessel of 1530.

Armored vessels of war had an earlier origin than is generally supposed. The Knights of St. John of Jerusalem built in 1530 a war galley, the Santa Anna, which was protected with a cuirass of lead, to its great advantage in sea fights. The Santa Anna had another modern feature; a contemporary chronicler narrates with pleased astonishment that the vessel carried a bakery, which permitted the crew to enjoy the luxury of fresh bread.

Made Them Even.

Hogan and Murphy were on their way to work early one morning, when Hogan, being a few yards in front of Murphy, stooped down and picked up a dollar. "Sure," said Murphy, "that's my dollar ye have found." Hogan stood amazed, saying as he gave Murphy the coin, "Thin that squares up the dollar I owe ye."
